US Ambassador Says

Some Improvement
In Japan
In The Last Year

Washington, June 8.

The American Ambassador to Japan, Mr. John Allison, said today that the general situation in Japan has improved since he took up his Tokyo post about a year ago.

Mr. Allison made the statements in answer to reporters' questions after he called on President Eisenhower and spent 15 minutes with him. He described the visit as a courtesy call not connected with any specific issue.

Mr. Allison, who returned to the United States for consultations, timed the visit in order to be here during the visit of Japanese Premier Shigeru Yoshida. As it had been postponed, he said he planned tentatively to return to Japan at the end of next week.

The VC
Whose Courage Failed

London, June 8.

It was war that nourished the courage of Frederick Hedges; and it was war that sapped his courage away. For in World War I he won the V.C. But as a result of World War II he took his life.

Frederick Hedges was a lieutenant when he displayed, in the words of his citation, the "most conspicuous bravery and initiative" that led to his V.C. German machine-guns were holding up a 1918 advance. With "the greatest determination and gallantry" Lieutenant Hedges went forward with a sergeant.

They captured six machine-guns and 14 prisoners; and they cleared the way for the advancing British.

That then was the courage of Frederick Hedges.

A DRINKING BOUT

The turning-point, when courage began to fade, came 24 years later. In 1942, the third year of World War II, his only son was killed.

From that moment life changed for Frederick Hedges. He began to worry; depressions clouded his mind; nervous disorders became frequent. In 1951 he was found drunk in his car and a court fined him £50 and suspended his licence for two years. The day of the drinking bout was the anniversary of his son's death.

The end of Frederick Hedges' courage, and with it the end of his life at 57, came last Saturday. He was found hanged at his home in Harrogate.

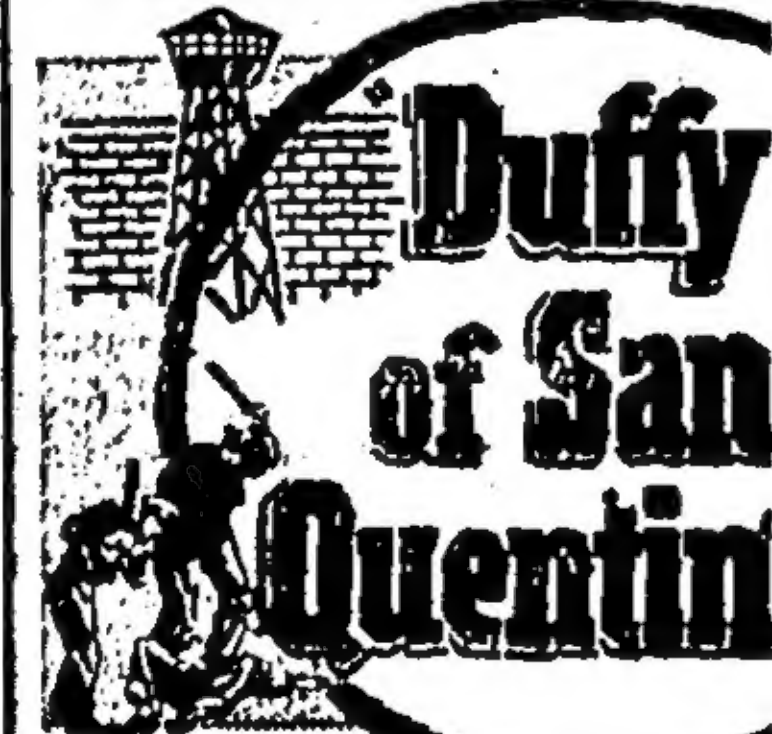

At yesterday's inquest the coroner, Mr. E. T. Hoop, recorded a verdict that he took his life while the mind's balance was disturbed.

Said Mr. Hoop: "It is very tragic that a man who won this medal for gallantry should end his life in this way."

Miss Webster, A Librarian Says:

British Are Far More
"Bookish"
Than The Americans

London, June 9.

Just returned from a six months' stay in the United States, and trying to get used to British reading habits again, is Miss Monica Webster, branch librarian at Northfleet, Kent.

Across the Atlantic Miss Webster soon found that the British are far more "bookish" than the Americans.

"In proportion to the population, there are three times as many book shops in Britain as in America," she said.

"I think this is mainly due to television, which starts at nine o'clock in the morning in the States, and the tremendous number of clubs and other organizations there."

"A WHOLE MORNING" "Also everyone reads a great many periodicals, and, of course, it takes a whole morning to read one of their enormous newspapers."

During her stay in America, Miss Webster worked with the Illinois State Library at regional centres, and visited libraries in hospitals, schools, and university colleges.

"Parents and teachers over there are worried about the sadistic type of comic American children read so much," Miss Webster went on.

JACOBY ON BRIDGE

Watch Partner For Valuable Tips

By OSWALD JACOBY

WHEN an expert doubles a slam that has been bid voluntarily, he is trying to steer his partner to the "killing" opening lead. For many years I followed the convention that such a double asks for a lead in the first suit bid by the dummy, but in the last few years I have swung over to the view that the double should merely ask for an unusual lead.

The difference can be enormous, as may be seen in today's hand, taken from my brand-new book, "What's New in Bridge."

If you are West, you must pick the right opening lead to defeat this slam. The double warns you not to lead hearts, your partner's bid suit. Since a trump lead is out of the question (it is almost always the worst possible lead against a slam), you must choose between diamonds and clubs.

Your partner cannot be void of clubs, because he merely overcalled with one heart; if he had been really short in clubs, he probably would have made a takeout double of one club. If your partner has club tricks, it is extremely unlikely that he needs an immediate club lead to make sure of those tricks. Hence you have every reason to believe that your partner's double calls for a diamond lead.

If you come to this correct conclusion, a diamond lead will permit your partner to take the first two tricks. If you lead anything else, declarer will easily take 13 tricks with six spades, six clubs, and the ace of hearts.

You might quite reasonably quarrel with North's jump raise to three spades. I agree with you that this is a slight overbid. Nevertheless, South will make this slam unless the defence is on its toes.

CARD SENSE

Q—With both sides vulnerable, the bidding has been:

North East South West
1 Diamond 1 Spade ?

You, South, hold: Spades A-6, Hearts 5-2, Diamonds K-Q-9-5, Clubs A-Q-J-4-2. What do you do?

A—Bid three clubs. You have 10 points in high cards, 1 point extra for high cards in your partner's bid suit, and 2 points for the doubletons. This is ample for a jump take-out, particularly since your two aces entitle you to be interested in a slam.

TODAY'S QUESTION

The bidding is the same as in the question just answered.

You, South, hold: Spades 7-6, Hearts 5-2, Diamonds K-Q-9-5, Clubs A-Q-J-4-2. What do you do?

Answer Tomorrow.

"Ma, guess what's inside a sofa pillow."

YOUR BIRTHDAY... By STELLA

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 9

BORN today, you have about everything that one might wish for: fame and success—talent; business ability when combined with a partner; independence in idea and action; sympathy with the problems of others; and last but not least, the ability to take care of detail with precision. In addition, you have social charm and know how to secure the co-operation of those who work with you.

Yet, you must be warned against a self-necked pride which sometimes stands in your way. You would starve rather than ask help from anyone, and you are too inclined to work at such a high pitch that your nervous energy becomes too easily depleted. Learn to relax at regular intervals and you will last longer.

You women are a little more on the serious side; you are fond of society and enjoy fine clothes and entertainments. You make splendid hostesses and are usually such a success at this that you do not cultivate your mind quite as much as you should. Attached to your home, you will be happiest if you work early in life.

Among those who were born on this date are: Leopold Auer, violinist; John Howard Payne, composer; Samuel N. Behrman, playwright; and Francis M. Finch, jurist and poet.

Mr. Merlin's Magical "Ponies"

—The Shadows "Rode" on Two Feather Dusters—

By MAX TRELL

KNARF, the shadow-boy with the turned-about name, was saying to his sister Hanid: "I wish I had a pony."

"So do I," said Hanid.

"Yes," said Knarf, "it would be wonderful if we both had ponies. We could both go riding all through the woods and around the hill and across the meadow and over the brook and back home again."

At this moment, Knarf and Hanid heard the voice of Mr. Merlin the Magician saying: "Giddap, there! Giddap!"

The next second, Mr. Merlin the Magician appeared from behind the bookcase where he lived.

Knarf and Hanid were sure that Mr. Merlin was coming out riding on a pony. To their surprise and disappointment, they saw that he was only riding on a broomstick.

He wasn't riding very high. The broomstick was just an inch or two above the floor. It just glided around a bit over the carpet and around the chairs.

Finally Mr. Merlin called out "Whoa!" in a loud voice. At this the broomstick fell flat on the floor and Mr. Merlin fell down on top of it.

A Reckless Steed

Knarf and Hanid helped Mr. Merlin to his feet. As for the broomstick, it did a very strange thing indeed. It lifted itself up and went sweeping around the room.

"Whoa!" shouted Mr. Merlin. But the broomstick didn't stop at all. Mr. Merlin started running after it. So did Knarf and Hanid. At last they drove it into a corner.

But their troubles weren't over yet.

The broomstick began beating at them, slapping and whacking with all its might. Fortunately, Mr. Merlin seized it and held it quiet.

"The broomstick is worse than a wild pony," Mr. Merlin said to Knarf and Hanid.

"We were just wishing we had a pony to ride," Knarf said.

"Do you think we could ride that broomstick?" said Hanid.

"Well," said Mr. Merlin, "I don't know. It's a little big for you two kids. I can get you two smaller and better behaved ones to ride."

Mr. Merlin gave a low whistle. Immediately two gentle-looking feather dusters came floating into the room from behind the bookcase.

"Here," said Mr. Merlin, as he gave Knarf and Hanid each one of the feather dusters.

"These little ponies have the nicest manners in the world,"

Mr. Merlin, the Magician, was riding on a broomstick.

Mr. Merlin said, "Now let's go for a ride!"

So Knarf and Hanid and Mr. Merlin sat astride their broomsticks and feather dusters and went sailing around the room, up and down, over chairs and around lamps, up the walls and close under the ceiling.

Future Plans

"You know," Knarf said when they finally came down to rest, "I never knew that people could ride on broomsticks and feather dusters. I'm going to ride again tomorrow and every day."

But alas for Knarf's hopes. When he and Hanid tried to ride the broomstick and the feather dusters the next day, nothing happened at all. They fell to the ground and stayed there. They had to admit that Mr. Merlin the Magician had more to do with making broomsticks and feather dusters act like ponies than they had thought at first.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

To smooth rough edges of wooden clothes hangers, cover the frayed sections with Scotch tape.

When a recipe calls for both shortening and molasses, syrup or honey, measure the shortening first, and use the same cup to measure the liquid. The shortening keeps the syrup from sticking to the cup.

The spool on which adhesive tape was wound makes an excellent spool for narrow ribbon.

Sweets Designed For Beginner Cooks

By ALICE DENHOFF

A YOUNG bride has requested some pie recipes that aren't too difficult to make, but still taste special. It seems she's tired of hearing about mother's wonderful pies and wants to earn recognition for her brand. On the theory that others may have the same idea, here are some different pie fillings, easy to make and easy to enjoy.

Maple Pecan Cream Pie is sure to please. To fill a baked 9-in. pastry shell, blend 1-1/3 c. (15 oz. tin) sweetened condensed milk, 2/3 c. maple syrup and 1/4 tsp. salt in heavy saucepan; mix well. Cook over low heat, stirring occasionally, until mixture begins to boil. Let boil, stirring constantly, until mixture thickens (about 4 min.). Cool. Add about half of 1/2 c. chopped pecans to cooked mixture, reserving remainder for top.

Put mixture in cooled, baked pastry shell. Sprinkle top with remaining pecans. Whip 1/2 c. heavy cream until stiff, and fold in 1 tsp. confectioner's sugar. Fill cream lightly on pie filling. For an extra touch garnish with whole pecans.

NOT TOO SWEET

As a dessert pie that's not so sweet, but just as good, try Fruit Cream Cheese Pie, the filling for the usual 9-in. baked pastry shell.

Put 1-1/3 c. sweetened condensed milk and 1/4 c. lemon juice into mixing bowl; stir until mixture thickens.

Beat one 3-oz. package cream cheese, softened at room temperature, until smooth. Separate 2 eggs, and add 1 egg yolk at a time, to cheese, beating well after each addition.—Add any one of following fruits: 1 c. sliced strawberries, 1 c. drained, crushed pineapple, 1 1/2 c. (No. 2 tin) red sour pitted cherries, well drained, or 2 medium bananas, sliced. Mix well. Fold cheese-fruit mixture into sweetened condensed milk mixture, and turn into baked pastry shell.

Add 1/4 tsp. cream of tartar to 2 egg whites; beat until almost stiff enough to hold a peak. Add 4 tbsp. sugar gradually, beating until whites are stiff and glossy but not dry. Pipe egg whites lightly on pie filling. Bake in slow oven (325° F.) until lightly browned, about 15 min. Cool.

ALMOND AMBROSIA

Not a pie, but a delicious party dessert, that's Almond Ambrosia, the recipe to serve 8-10.

Combine fruit and syrup of No. 2 tin orange and grapefruit sections with a No. 2 tin crushed pineapple. Mix in 1 1/2 c. freshly grated coconut. Let stand several hours, or overnight, if possible, to thoroughly blend flavours. Put in dessert dishes and sprinkle with 1/2 c. chopped toasted almonds.

American Airmen Converted An Iceberg Into Drifting Weather Station

By Herman R. Allen, AP Newsfeatures Writer

In the summer of 1950 a U.S. Air Force plane was making a weather reconnaissance flight up toward the North Pole. Suddenly, through the heavy cloud cover, its radar picked up a large mass that almost anywhere else in the world would immediately be recognized as an island. On later flights radar picked up other such masses. But no island had ever been charted in that part of the Arctic Sea. Puzzled, Air Force men returned to the area several times without seeing the mysterious masses. Eventually, the weather cleared and enabled them to take pictures.

They turned out to be islands of a sort—floating islands of ice, big flat-topped icebergs. The idea immediately occurred to the Air Force that they might be used as weather observation bases, but by then the long northern winter was setting in and nothing could be done immediately. March, April and early May are the times of least visibility in the Arctic, and bright and early in 1951, the Air Force was back. Eventually planes were landed and exploring parties sent out. The islands were christened T-1, T-2 and T-3, the "T" standing for "target". In 1952 a weather station was established on T-3, the largest of the ice floes, which is 36 square miles in area. At that time T-3 was in waters north of Alaska. In late 1952 it had drifted to within about 130 miles of the North Pole. Since then it has curved off to the south and now it has come so close to a permanent weather station at Alert, Ellesmere Island—only 60 miles away at last report—that it has been temporarily abandoned. When it has moved far enough away from Alert to be useful again, the Air Force says, it will be put into use again.

I Like British People, Says Nasser: But Not Their Policies

The Prime Minister, Lieutenant Colonel Gamal Abdel Nasser, does no more than reflect the feeling of all Egyptians when he says that Egypt's first foreign preoccupation is a friendly settlement with Britain.

"I like the British people," he declared recently, "but I don't like British policy." And what he would like to see is a change in British policy so far as the Suez Canal zone is concerned.

Every now and again there is talk in the Egyptian press of yet another effort being made to settle Anglo-Egyptian differences, which really means those relating to the Canal Zone. Egypt still regards the British troops in the Canal Zone as constituting an "occupying force" and wants this affront to her sovereignty removed. Since the revolt in July 1952 Egypt's young military rulers have gone a considerable way towards removing difficulties concerning the Canal Zone. The question of British technicians remaining on the base and its availability to British Forces in the event of an emergency appear to be the only remaining stumbling blocks.

Generally Egypt's foreign policy is based on the solidarity of the Arab League countries. She wants friendship with all who wish to be her friends. The only exception is Israel, with whom she is still in a state of war.

Recognise China?

Even now Egypt is about to take a final decision on whether or not to recognise Communist China. "This," he is officially stated, "is another link in the chain of research done by Egypt with a view to increasing trade exchange and economic co-operation with other countries." In a nut-shell, Egypt wants as many foreign friends as possible and reciprocal trade with them.

So far as the home front is concerned, the policy of the Nasser Government is to maintain security and stability, to combat Communism and to develop and expand the agricultural, industrial and oil resources of the country.

The big landed estates are steadily being broken up, foreign capital is being attracted for the development of new industries and plans to search for oil in both the Western Desert and the Sinai Desert are now being made on an increasingly large scale.

Economically the country is sound, but one of the legacies of the "bad old days" to which Colonel Nasser recently referred, is the top-heavy Civil Service. When the political parties were in power they placed their supporters in Government posts, sometimes appointing them as heads of non-existent departments which were even then over-stuffed.

The Nasser Government is endeavouring to streamline the Civil Service, but that is a task which will take some time to accomplish. —China Mail Special.

Taking No Chances

The United States has never claimed they were useful for anything but weather stations and such uses. The Russians, however, apparently are taking no chances. Just a few days before T-3 was evacuated they sent a plane over, apparently taking photographs. Lomonosov also announced that the Russians (who claim to have been ahead on nearly everything, from the sewing machine to the aeroplane) discovered the three ice floes long before the Americans.

Apparently the Russians have done a good deal of work in the Arctic. Lomonosov's article detailed some theories of how ice floes travel in vast circular or elliptical routes, staying largely within the eastern and western hemispheres because of the underwater Lomonosov mountain range that cuts straight across the polar area. These theories tally fairly well with the observed route of T-3, which appears to travel in an ellipse of the rate of about two miles per day when floating freely.

Another Soviet scientist revealed that an Arctic shipping route along the northern coast of Russia "was in regular use. Use of Arctic sea lanes has been made possible according to P. Gordenko, by intensive study of ice conditions which had enabled Soviet meteorologists to predict ice movements along the route accurately."

Setback For Eisenhower Trade Plan

Washington, June 8.

President Eisenhower's bold new foreign economic programme with its emphasis on tariff reductions is now a dead issue in the current session of Congress.

He had asked, last March, for a three-year extension of the tariff-cutting Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act and special authority to negotiate additional reductions so that world trade would be stimulated and practical effects given to the "Trade not Aid" concept.

But faced with a partly-splitting fight in this election year and the heavy pressures of the trade protectionists, the President has been forced to modify his stand and to let it be known that he would be willing to settle for a simple one-year extension of the trade law without any new tariff-cutting authority this year.

This retreat came as an unpleasant surprise to the liberal trade supporters, although they had been very much aware recently that the Eisenhower Administration was not making much use of its influence to help the programme through Congress.

As a practical matter, it was realised that Congress, this year especially, would be most reluctant to give Mr. Eisenhower all he wanted anyway.

But it was not expected that the widely-publicised plan to boost world trade which had stirred up big hopes abroad, would be abandoned so early and without at least a test flight.

The President's decision means that the major battle over tariffs will be postponed until the next session of Congress, which re-convenes in January after the membership and party control has been determined in the November elections.

ACTION NEXT YEAR

In the meantime, Congressional committees are expected to study and hold hearings on the proposed three-year extension and additional tariff cuts so that the way would be cleared for early action next year.

Low-tariff advocates, disheartened by the new situation, which they regard as tantamount to appeasement of the protectionists, now fear that these forces will be encouraged to press for more and more concessions.

There is certainly no evidence that the short-term compromise will satisfy the special interest groups and their Congressional representatives, whose ultimate objective is to kill the trade law itself.

Established by Congress 20 years ago, the reciprocal programme empowers the State Department to negotiate with other nations for tariff reductions.

Its opponents, mostly in the ranks of the President's own Republican Party, believe that the current slow-down in business activity and concern over unemployment, gives them a powerful weapon for use against any move to liberalise trade through tariff adjustment and permit foreign nations to earn more dollars through sales in the American market.

STIFF FIGHT

Congress is expected to approve the one-year continuation of the trade law which expires on June 12.

However, the high-tariff bloc is ready to put up a stiff fight for:

1. Amendments which would tighten tariff or quota restrictions on specific imports like lead, zinc, oil, farm products and a wide range of other articles.
2. Limitations on the President's power to over-ride higher tariff recommendations of the Federal Tariff Commission which can propose upward adjustments when it considers domestic industries are injured or threatened with injury by competitive imports.
3. A ban on the making of any new tariff agreements during the extension of the law.

Such a ban was imposed by Congress last year when the Randall Commission on Foreign Economic Policy was reviewing the whole trade and tariff field to produce the basis of Mr. Eisenhower's original programme.

The tariff question has always been a thorny one in American politics and the issues are sharper this year because of the approaching election.

TIES WITH REDS

The protectionists argue that any lowering of the tariff would open the way for a flood of cheaply-made foreign goods which would force competing domestic business into bankruptcy and create widespread unemployment.

Many Congressmen, campaigning for re-election, cannot afford to ignore the impact of this argument on the voters, and for that reason would be reluctant to support the Eisenhower programme.

The Administration's case is that an expanded two-way trade is essential in the nation's security and economic interests and that unless the United States opens its markets, friendly trading nations would be forced into closer economic ties with the Communist world.

The results of the November elections would have an important bearing on the fate of the original Eisenhower trade programme in the next Congress.

Traditionally the Republicans, who now control Congress, are regarded as the high-tariff party. The Opposition Democrats generally support more liberal trade and if they capture Congress in November, the chances of a favourable action on the President's plan would be greatly improved. —Reuter.

Japanese Plant Being Sent To Yugoslavia

Belgrade, June 8.

The first equipment for a fibre factory at Lomnica, Serbia, whose plant is being supplied from Japan, is expected to arrive in Yugoslavia in September, the Yugoslav news agency, Tanjug, said today.

When completed, the plant would have a daily production of 55 tons. Japanese technicians would come early in 1955 to install machinery.

The construction of the factory will cost about $15,000,000 and will save Yugoslavia about $24,000,000 in textile imports.

The contract for the supply of Japanese equipment was signed last September. —Reuter.

HONGKONG STOCK EXCHANGE

(From Our Correspondent)

Until some specific news is forthcoming from Geneva the market appears likely to continue its present quiet pattern. Further improvement in the London Register of M.K. Bank shares reflected firmness locally with unsatisfied buyers offering $1.645 at the close.

Apart from some demand for Amalgamated Rubber shares which were fractionally stronger the market was idle and neglected.

Business on the Stock Exchange this morning amounted to $176,973.60. Noon quotations and the morning's dealings:—

Oil Consumption In Britain Highest Since War

London, June 8.

Britain consumed more oil last year than in any year since the war, according to estimates published by the Petroleum Information Bureau. Oil consumption reached 19,002,695 tons compared with 17,510,285 tons in 1952 and 16,887,908 tons in 1951.

This expansion largely reflected a further increase in the demand for motor spirit, but was also helped by the revival in industrial production.

Consumption of motor spirit is put at 5,730,000 tons, compared with 5,440,552 tons in 1952 and 5,434,264 in 1951. Last year's motor spirit consumption is divided into 2,452,032 tons of premium grade petrol and 3,277,968 tons of standard grade, but these proportions hide the demand of the private motorist for the premium grades, since the figures include the consumption of commercial vehicles.

Petrol supplied to dealers serving private motorists was divided into 2,197,254 tons of premium grade and 1,578,200 tons of the standard grade. The rise in total petrol consumption clearly results from the increasing number of cars on the road, but industry too used much more oil than in either 1951 or 1952.

BRITISH REFINERIES

One of the most encouraging features is the growing production of home refined products. Refineries in Britain produced as much as 23,353,900 tons of petroleum and petroleum by-products last year compared with 22,490,353 tons in 1952 and virtually nothing before the war. While fuel oil was again the main product, British refineries expanded their output of motor and aviation spirits considerably—from 4,935,918 tons to 6,243,355 tons.

Production of gas and diesel oil, too, was raised from 3,803,481 tons to 4,303,033 tons. Britain is now reaping the benefits of the £150 millions invested in the new refineries since the war. Last year's output of 23,353,900 tons compares with only 6,163,780 tons in 1949 and 2,391,722 tons in 1938.

Heavy Falls In US Stock Prices

New York, June 8.

Two waves of selling today put the New York Stock Market through its worst break in four years—since the day after fighting broke out in Korea.

The selling slashed $3,000,000—000 from the market value of all listed stocks. Individual losses ranged to well over 4 points.

The damage amounted to $8.06 in the Dow Jones Industrial average—the sharpest decline since June 29, 1950. Rails were hit even harder, falling $3.56 in their widest drop since September 3, 1940. The utilities loss of 89 cents was the widest since June 9, 1953 and the break in the general market of $2.73 the biggest since June 26, 1950.

Selling was concentrated in two waves—one in the second hour which forced reporting tricklers to run behind floor transactions for as much as four minutes; the other late in the day when prices dropped even lower.

Despite the concentrated selling in these periods, turnover for the day amounted to 2,540,000 shares.

"PURELY TECHNICAL"

Wall Street says the break is "purely technical." Market men found nothing in the domestic or foreign news to affect prices. After a virtually continuous rise since last September, they reasoned, a decline was in order and many felt it would serve to lower prices to a level where new demand might develop to push the list to even higher levels.

Losses were greatest in issues which led the recent rise. In the oil, Texas Pacific, Land Trust, Cities Service, Seaboard Oil lost 4 points or more. Texas Gulf Producing, Phillips, Standard of Indiana, Amerasia, Mid-Continent, Standard Oil (N.J.) and Texas Company, fell two points or more.

Du Pont dropped more than 4 points. General Electric fell 1 1/2 points. Westinghouse Electric fell 1 1/2 points. General Motors backed down 1 1/2 points and Chrysler 7/8 point. Steel issues ranged to 2 1/2 points in Republic.

Out of 1,242 issues traded, only 127 were higher, 100 unchanged while 915 were lower. The New York Stock Exchange volume was $4,360,000. The American Stock Exchange volume was 580,000 shares. —United Press.

JOHN CLARKE'S CASEBOOK JOSEPH SHINES

THE policeman stood on a corner of a busy West End street, watching the traffic crawl by and the hurrying pedestrians. A dignified, benign but vigilant figure the policeman made, standing there like a shepherd regarding his flock or a schoolmaster keeping an eye on a class in which should he relax his watch, mischief would instantly explode.

But the policeman's flock was behaving that afternoon in an exemplary manner. No motorists were trying to park their cars in forbidden places, no mail vans were being robbed just there. All was serene. And yet...

SOMETHING WRONG?

LIKE some detective in fiction, the officer had an uneasy feeling that all was not quite so well as it seemed. Something was wrong somewhere, and try as he might, he could not think what.

His skilled, observant eye ranged over the familiar scene. There were the busy newspaper sellers at their pitches, the splendid commissionaire at his post by the restaurant door. There was the cab rank, there the scarlet-coated bootblack...

The officer drew a short, startled breath. The scarlet-coated bootblack was not there. In his customary place, his by license and tradition, was a stranger. A wispy-haired man with a whimsical face, whose only lively was his eyes, and who was cleaning a customer's shoes with vigour and every show of pleasure.

I'M BUSY

SATISFIED, the customer paid for the service and left. Another at once took his place and the ragged man went to work again with gusto.

The policeman let him finish, then marched over, and the tyre, whose mind was all on his work, was about to pick up the constabular left foot, when the officer called him to order. "I am arresting you," he said, "for unauthorized occupation of a stand licensed to a bootblack."

"Oh no, I'm busy, do go away, there's customers waiting," said Joseph. He persisted so long in declining to move that at Bow Street next morning there were two charges against him. Unauthorized occupation, and obstruction of the officer in the execution of his duty.

PAID A BOB

THE story was told to Mr. Bertram Reece. "I would like to point out," said the officer, "that this man has made two applications to the police for a bootblack's licence. These have been refused. On what grounds, I do not know."

"It was another man's pitch, where you arrested him, was it?" the magistrate asked. He was told that it was.

"But listen," Joseph put in. "I paid a bob for a permit, and they said they'd give me one. And when I go to this place, people keep on coming wanting shoes cleaned."

"I've no doubt you were performing a useful service," said Mr. Reece.

NEW VISTAS

"AHEM, sir," said the officer. "I understand there is a medical history. This man was discharged from the Army on medical grounds. He's been working in hotels, lately."

"What you'd better do is get some job in a hotel and clean shoes there," said the magistrate to Joseph. "I'll discharge you conditionally."

"Thank you, sir," said Joseph. A great, beaming grin spread over his face. He had only done kitchen work in hotels before. The magistrate's suggestion opened up new vistas of enchantment—miles of hotel corridors with shoes outside each bedroom door, waiting to be cleaned. Shoes, shoes, shoes, in a never-ending supply. He hurried away to get the beautiful job.

Vow To Wipe Out Terrorism

Tunis, June 8. The French authorities vowed tonight to wipe out terrorism in this troubled North African protectorate and revealed a tough security plan involving almost general mobilisation of all available forces to protect French and Tunisian farmers from the attacks of Fellaghas (outlaws).

"French and Tunisians have been forced to fight the battle of the wheat. This battle they shall pursue to the end with the most inflexible determination," said a communique issued by the French Residency General here.

"Operation Harvest" as it was called, was designed to give military and armed protection to French and Tunisian farmers at the time of the wheat harvest. Gangs of fellaghas have been spreading terror in several parts of the country by murdering French settlers and setting their wheat fields afire.

"Everything shall be done so that despite criminals attempting to terrorize, ruin and starve Tunisia, the harvest shall be effected under good conditions throughout the territory," said the communique.

The communique disclosed that all the protection measures were worked out at a meeting last Monday between French military and civilian authorities responsible for public order in Tunisia. The measures envisaged included the pooling of the necessary machinery for the harvest of French and Tunisian agriculture and the work being done in common under the protection of armed forces.—United Press.

New Sign Of Collective Leadership

Moscow, June 9. Soviet newspapers yesterday stressed the Government's declared principle of "collective leadership" by printing the names of the nation's nine leaders in strict alphabetical order.

This was the first time the names of Soviet leaders had appeared in this way. Only nine days ago when similar list was published after a Red Square parade, Mr. Georgi Malenkov topped the roll.

In Pravda, Izvestia and other papers yesterday, Malenkov's name was fourth. The Foreign Minister, Mr. Vyacheslav Molotov, was sixth and the Communist Party Secretary, Mr. Nikita Khrushchev, ninth.

The names were published in a report of the opening session of the Soviet Trade Union Congress. The list, following the Russian alphabet, was: Bulganin, Voroshilov, Kaganovich, Malenkov, Mikoyan, Molotov, Pervukhin, Saburov and Khrushchev.

On April 22, after the last Supreme Soviet session, they appeared as follows: Malenkov, Molotov, Khrushchev, Voroshilov, Bulganin, Kaganovich, Mikoyan, Saburov and Pervukhin.

This has been the standard listing since Stalin's death.—Reuter.

E. Germans To Buy British

London, June 9. The first East German trade delegation to visit Britain announced here last night that its Government intended to buy more than £30 million worth of goods from British and other Western firms at the Leipzig fair in September.

Herr Bruno Theusscher, Secretary of the State-run East German Chamber of Commerce, told a press conference the fair would be a "shop window for the products of the entire Eastern world." Russia, Communist China and the countries of Eastern Europe would have purchasing missions larger than ever before.—Reuter.

"SPEEDY" HELP FOR CHURCHES

Stern Action Taken In Guatemala

Guatemala City, June 8. President Jacobo Arbenz suspended constitutional guarantees and assumed special powers today on the grounds that Guatemala's peace and order were threatened.

An executive decree approved by the Council of Ministers and Congress at 4.30 this morning suspended the freedoms of thought expression, including freedom of the press and of movement, assembly and correspondence, for 30 days.

(This means that the government is empowered to set up press, radio, telegraph and mail censorship, that no meetings will be permitted and that freedom of travel will be curtailed. Home searches without warrants will be permitted and all persons may be subject to indefinite arrest without formal indictment or trial.)

Prior to President Arbenz's decree, it was reported that Colonel Jose Lima, noted opposition leader, had been arrested. It was also reported that Colonel Miguel Mendoza, a former presidential candidate, fled with his brother Rodolfo, a noted flier, when the latter took off in a private plane last Friday.

REAL REASON

The report said the real reason for Rodolfo Mendoza's flight was his brother's arrest. The brother of the latter was to be tried before the secret police seized him.

Ferdinand Schuppe, former deputy chief of the United States air mission here, left with the Mendoza brothers.

In what may well be one of the last opposition political comments to be published for some time, the independent evening newspaper El Espectador said last night that the Guatemalan Labour Party—another name for the Communist Party—was torn by a "deep split."

One faction, El Espectador said, wants "nationalist Communism" along the lines followed by Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia while the other wants to adhere closely to the Moscow line.

According to the newspaper, Jose Manuel Fortuny, Party Secretary General on leave of absence because of illness, "has lost his power within the Communist lines."—United Press.
